Environmental Sustainability Initiatives – Aurora, Colorado (Updated August 2020)

The environment is a precious resource, and in Aurora, the city is working hard to preserve it. Hundreds of acres of open space have been acquired so future generations can continue to enjoy the natural areas that make Colorado such a great place to live. Numerous citywide policies are in place to ensure that the city is developing environmentally friendly programs and providing residents and businesses with opportunities to reduce their carbon footprint.

In fact, The Colorado Department of Public Health and Environment presented the city with the Colorado Environmental Leadership Program's Bronze Achiever award in 2011, which is a voluntary program designed to recognize and reward organizations and businesses that demonstrate superior environmental performance. Since then, the city also was designated a silver-level Solar Friendly Community by the Solar Friendly Communities/Colorado Solar Energy Industries Association. And in 2017, the city earned a bronze designation from SolSmart (a program funded by the U.S. Department of Energy Sunshot Initiative) for our efforts to encourage solar energy growth.

Environmental initiatives include, but are not limited to:

City Planning, Development and Building Code

- Aurora's comprehensive plan, Aurora Places, includes the goal of having a thriving environment, acknowledging that stewardship of water, energy and natural resources is essential to the physical and mental wellbeing of residents and the city's ability to support future growth. The plan also acknowledges the importance of incorporated complete streets to allow safe access for pedestrians, bicyclists, motorists and transit riders of all ages and abilities, and the city has launched a complete streets initiative that continues to evolve.
- The city completed an update of its zoning code in 2019. As part of this process, the city incorporated a number of provisions and standards that promote sustainable environmental design. Specific provisions or standards are proposed to address: infill development, the quality of the public realm, compact mixed-use development, walking and biking as transportation modes, low impact development for responsible storm water management, urban agriculture, adaptive reuse of old or vacant buildings, high levels of transportation network connectivity, and renewable energy production.
- The former Sustainable Infill and Redevelopment (SIR) Zoning District standards, which encourage creative approaches to sustainable development and redevelopment within high-profile, targeted areas of the city, were rolled into the mixed-use commercial category in order to be deployed citywide.
- Aurora has planned transit-oriented development (TOD) around its light-rail stations. These TOD areas are bringing high-density areas to the city with retail stores and restaurants, offices, housing and public transit all in one spot.
- Residential design standards are designed to ensure that Aurora stays competitive in the metropolitan market for homes in terms of pricing, quality, location, energy, water efficiency and indoor air quality while preserving architectural design, durability, choice and home value.
- The city has adopted the 2015 International Energy Conservation Code, which is 15 percent better than the previously adopted energy code. This is a comprehensive model code that establishes minimum requirements for energy-efficient buildings, and makes use of emerging technologies and energy-saving principles.

Renewable Energy

- Aurora is home to the first shared solar technology center of its kind in North America, occupying 74 acres of the 1,762-acre Aurora Campus for Renewable Energy (ACRE). It includes several public- and private-sector entities working on solar-energy commercialization. SolarTAC provides a solar facility where member companies can bring their technologies for testing and demonstration, particularly solar technologies at the early commercial or near-commercial stage of development.
- Two three-acre community solar gardens located in Aurora and operated by the Clean Energy Collective provide Xcel Energy customers with the option to buy renewable energy credits from these solar gardens to use at their homes and businesses.
- Photovoltaic systems operate at three city facilities, reducing power consumption purchased from the commercial power company by 460,200 kWh/year and lowering the carbon footprint by about 5 tons/year.
- Solar thermal domestic hot water heat systems at Fire Stations No. 8 and 10, Meadow Hills Pool and Beck Recreation Center, taking care of certain hot water needs at these facilities and saving energy.
- The city was recognized in 2013 as a Solar Friendly Community for adopting policies and procedures that streamline solar permitting, making solar installation faster for installers and less expensive for citizens.
- SolSmart, a program of the U.S. Department of Energy's SunShot Initiative, awarded the city a bronze designation in 2017 for its efforts to encourage solar energy growth.

Tree Planting and Parks

- Aurora has been designated a "Tree City USA®" for more than 30 years, with more than 77,000 city-owned trees.

Recycling, Cleanup Events and Air Quality

- The city partners with private businesses to offer electronics and mattress recycling, used cooking oil collection, collection of liquid mercury and mercury-containing devices, and used alkaline battery recycling. From 2016 to 2017, the city and its partners collected 1,633,910 pounds of recyclable materials at the city's drop-off facility, 174,263 pounds of electronics, 930 gallons of used cooking oil, 1,943 pounds of batteries, 20 containers of mercury and 134 household appliances.
- In 2019, the city hosted its first-ever waste-free luncheon and recycling fair.
- Aurora Water's Household Chemical Roundup annually collects and recycles aerosols, antifreeze, hazardous wastes, paint, pesticides, tires and more.
- The city recycles tons of office waste, toxic lead and copper from police firing range bullets, and fleet shop materials and fluids.
- Aurora Water hosts the High Line Canal Clean Up each year, recruiting hundreds of volunteers to pick up trash along an 11-mile stretch of the canal before water upstream is released into the canal in the spring.
- The city hosted an Aurora Cleanup Day from 2015 to 2017, providing roll-off dumpsters at six locations in Aurora for disposal of large items of waste. In 2018 and 2019, the city provided coupons to dispose of large waste items at the local landfill at a defrayed cost.
- The Aurora Public Library circulates books, CDs and DVDs at a rate of nearly 800,000 times a year. That's two to three items each year for every one of Aurora's residents. If 800,000 books a year were purchased and tossed, that would be 400 tons of material going to the landfill or recycling center. Materials shared among customers reduces the amount of items to be manufactured and shipped, saving both material and energy resources. Books and DVDs get about 40 uses while CDs are used about 70 times.

- Aurora was one of the first metro-area municipalities to use alternatives to sand and salt for winter maintenance operations, therefore reducing small-sized particulate matter in the atmosphere and keeping the air cleaner.

Energy Efficiency and Conservation

- City fleet includes both hybrid cars and flex-fuel vehicles.
- City installed 28 grant-funded electric vehicle charging spots for public use at the Fitzsimons Village garage, the Iliff Station garage and Public Safety Training Center. Each of these spots are partially funded through grants. The city also added 12 more charging stations to serve its fleet vehicles at the Aurora Municipal Center.
- A Green Building Resolution passed in 2014 directs the city to pursue sustainability in new construction of city of Aurora buildings, upgrades and retrofits to existing buildings and major renovations. This applies to city facilities occupied by city personnel or for use by residents who access city services.
- Since 2009:
 - About 14,000 light bulbs/tubes in 41 city buildings have been retrofitted with new energy efficient ones, reducing about 15 tons of carbon dioxide gas emissions annually
 - HVAC repairs and upgrades at Aurora Municipal Campus buildings eliminated 15 tons of annual carbon dioxide gas emissions
 - Power management software funded with dollars from an Energy Efficiency and Conservation Block Grant allows city computers to be powered on and off remotely for automated updated and maintenance, allowing all computers to be turned off at the end of the day and resulting in 65 percent annual energy savings. The same grant dollars allowed the installation of a subfloor air management system in the city's data center, resulting in a 29 percent decrease in the center's energy costs.
 - All of the city's traffic signals have been retrofitted with LED lights, and lighting at select ball fields was upgraded, resulting in lower energy bills and reduced maintenance costs.

Transportation Alternatives

- The RTD R Line with 10 light rail stations runs through the heart of Aurora along I-225, with another two University of Colorado A Line commuter rail stations located along I-70
- Construction is under way or now complete for compact, mixed-use, pedestrian-friendly developments built within easy walking distance of the transit stations.
- Funds from the Denver Regional Council of Government's Transportation Improvement Program and city funds built first- and last-mile improvements at Colfax, Florida, Fitzsimons and Metro Center light rail stations, including an underpass at Alameda Avenue to connect the Aurora Municipal Campus to rail.
- The city is working with private partners to implement mobility hubs as concentrations of where people live, work, shop or recreate. Mobility hubs will allow people to easily and comfortably walk and bike within five minutes to a single location where they have a choice of accessing transit, bike or scooter share, car and ride sharing services, and electric vehicle charging stations.
- A bike and pedestrian master plan provides a long-range vision for giving bicyclists a safer way to travel and making it easier for pedestrians to navigate the city.
- Aurora offers 91 miles of trails available for pedestrians and bicyclists to traverse the city.
- The city is equipped with more than 46 miles of signed, on-street bicycling routes.
- The city's first protected bike lanes opened in 2020 as part of a project to build new bicycle and pedestrian trail connections between the Florida Station and the Westerly Creek and Toll Gate Creek trails.

Worth Discovering
auroragov.org

- The city launched a bike share permit program in 2017 to allow privately owned bike share operators to begin offering bike sharing within Aurora. This program was updated in 2019 to provide opportunities for other types of micro-mobility operations to come to Aurora.

Water Conservation and Reclamation

- The Parks, Recreation & Open Space department couples a computerized irrigation system with low-spray heads and radio-controlled moisture sensors to reduce water waste.
- Since 2007, more than 12,500 customers have benefited from Aurora Water's high efficiency toilet, xeriscape and irrigation rebates.
- Aurora Water's Youth Education program has reached 62,458 students with classroom presentations designed to teach children where their water comes from and how to prevent pollution.
- Aurora Water launched a Low-income Water Efficiency Program in 2011, and since then has retrofitted more than 284 low-income households with high efficiency toilets and low-flow showerheads and aerators.
- A xeriscape rebate program has successfully converted 1,430,761 square feet of Aurora residential turf to xeriscape. The program began in 2007.
- Prairie Waters uses a state-of-the-art, multi-barrier treatment process and increases Aurora's water capacity by up to 12 million gallons per day. The system provides additional drought protection by recapturing river water in the South Platte, and is the backbone for a regional partnership that provides fully treated water to communities heavily dependent on non-renewable sources.

Food

- DeLaney Community Farm grew and produced 5,000 pounds of produce from 2016 to 2017, and trained six refugee farmers.
- In 2017, there were 16 public active community gardens in Aurora.
